The Musical America Guide to Top COMPETITIONS

Editor's Note

With the arrival of the vaccines, a sliver of light has begun to emerge at the end of a long tunnel. Most presenters and event planners are still in a wait-and-see mode, ever trying to guess when they can return to a semblance of normal business. For competitions, which range from annual to quintennial in their life cycles, this has been particularly challenging: Postpone the date of the finals (if you dare predict that far in advance) and consider the cascading impact on every other date in the cycle, from the application deadline to the quarter- and semifinals. Will the venues booked still be available? How about the judges? Will they and the contenders be allowed to travel?

As such, we have added a few features in the annual Guide to Top Competitions, such as “Pandemic policies and procedures” for each entry, including the option to respond “TBD” for dates and venues. Some have moved the earlier stages of the cycle online, waiting to schedule live rounds until they get the go-ahead from health authorities. Others, like the Besançon International Competition for Young Conductors, have pushed the application deadline ahead, while maintaining the rest of the original schedule. Perhaps the most novel, not to mention generous, decision was that of the American Pianist Awards, which held its solo semifinals online to choose the finalists and, rather than award one prize to the winner, divided it among the five finalists.

It is a testament to all involved that, whether postponing deadlines, changing venues, restructuring the jury, or being forced to make any number of other alterations, these competitions have persevered. Their commitment to bringing new, exceptional talent into the limelight persists, and with that, their continued nourishment and renewal of the field.

Regards,

Susan Elliott
